

previous to the Hall-Mills case cashier for Armour, E. T. Dowd, called Jane Gibson's home on 'phone and asked to speak to her. Whoever answered the phone informed him that Mrs. Gibson was too ill to talk as she had pneumonia. On the same day that the murder was discovered same cashier again called Jane Gibson's home and whoever answered the phone informed him that the nurse was speaking and Mrs. Gibson was still too ill to talk.

Letter to Senator Case 9/8/26

Mrs. Salome Cerrenner, Mrs. Gibson's mother, 76 yrs of age, stated that she went to New Brunswick on Sept. 14, 1922 with her husband, William, to collect $1285 which she had loaned her daughter Mrs. Gibson. She remained with her daughter the night of the murder. She stated that she first heard about the murder from her daughter the 15th as it was in the newspapers. The first one Mrs. Gibson told the story to was Mr. ^{The} Tolp, after the Schneider boy was charged with the murders. She said that she had difficulty in getting her money from Mrs. Gibson; finally it was all paid up; Mrs. Cerrenner stated that she quarreled with Mrs. Gibson and wants nothing to do with her. She says her daughter played her dirty and called her a name she doesn't care to repeat. The sister, Minnie Roehl, does not want anything to do with Mrs. Gibson either. Both claim she is no good. She identified the picture of Anna King as that of Mrs. Gibson. The 4-yr old boy she confirmed being Mrs. Gibson's son.
